Both these posters were designed before computers were invented, not quite, it was however, way before desktop publishing made everyman and his dog, a graphic artist

In todays society we seem to be drowning in visual pollution.

I 💚 design, and conversely, I dislike baaad design ~ the mediocre rise and rise of basic design principles being pushed aside and railroaded by untrained, inexperienced or inept people putting published material out to the public.

Since I designed these 2 posters in the mid 80's, there has been enormous change in the graphic, industrial, interior, urban and landscaping design fields. The 3rd Millennium is the beginning of the digital age and lots of middlemen (type setters, compositors, printers) are redundant and even the way we read stuff has changed and the formats differ for different users (phones, tablet, laptops and desktops).

As a concept designer (a broad title which can cover all the above mentioned disciplines) there are only minimal restrictions/ boundaries to adhere to and the tools available is literally unbelievable, thanks to Ai (the 'artificial' needs to be in caps and the 'intelligence' deserves to be in lower case). Although I think there are more improvements to be made ~ even this QR code has many pitfalls that should be streamlined.

In this ever changing world, one has to evolve with the times to be on top of their endeavours.
